Delhi Arrival

Welcome to Delhi

Area Overview

The official capital of India is a bustling, chaotic miasma of humanity and also a fascinating megalopolis to spend some time in. There's an international flair in the city formerly known as "New Delhi," since it's the political capital of the country with embassies planted here from all over the planet.

Inevitably, every visitor to Delhi will end up in Old Delhi, the 17th-century chaotic swath of the city that is surrounded by five miles (or eight kilometers) of ramparts. Here there are bustling bazaars selling everything imaginable, centuries-old forts, salt-of-the-earth eateries, and enough honks and beeps to create a soundtrack to the area.

And while Old Delhi and other parts of this Indian metropolis can appear chaotic, it's also surprisingly green, as parks become a place to seek refuge. Outside of the center of town, there are tranquil neighborhoods to wander, such as the pedestrianized arts district Hauz Khas Village. Everywhere you go in Delhi, there are monumental buildings, ancient tombs, Hindu temples, mosques, and palaces and forts as well as trappings of modern, 21st-century life too. It's this mixture that makes Delhi a must-see for any visitor.

DAY 2

Area Overview

Deep in the heart of India, Bandhavgarh National Park in Madhya Pradesh is prime tiger territory. While the striped cat is the star resident, the lush Sal forests canopying the safari trails are home to a gorgeous diversity of wildlife, including the gaur and herds of sambhar, and is a treat for ornithologists. That apart, it is also an exceptionally beautiful space that is steeped in history.

Set amongst The Vindhya Hills in Madhya Pradesh, Bandhavgarh consists of 168 sq miles of Sal and a mixed forest of bamboo, grassland, and a complex of deciduous forests.

The Park takes its name from the Bandhavgarh Fort which is located on top of the highest (800m) hill in this region. The origins of this fort are lost in the mists of time. However, it is thought to be at least 2000 years old. The fort is surrounded by 32 smaller flat-topped hills forming a maze of well forested valleys, spurs and flatlands.

This area was the private game reserve of the Maharajas of Rewa, in fact Mohan, the ancestor of most captive white tigers, was captured from these forests by the Maharaja of Rewa. After independence, due to relaxed control, the forests of this region started deteriorating rapidly. To stop this process and preserve the forests, an area of 105 sq. km. was declared a National Park in 1965. The area of the park was increased to 448.84 sq. km. in 1982. In 1993 it was included in the Project Tiger Network.

Bandhavgarh is home to more than 40 species of mammals and more than 300 species of birds along with about 80 types of butterflies and a number of reptiles. Apart from the tiger, the mammals living in the Bandhavgarh include leopards, elephant, sloth bears, jackals, gaur, sambhar, barking deer, and many more. Rarely one might spot wolves, hyenas, and wild dogs. Bandhavgarh has always been an excellent tiger habitat and is known for the highest density of tigers in the world.

The Park's spectacular sal and bamboo forests, interspersed with grasslands, ravines and hills, offer unparalleled opportunities to photograph Indian wildlife. Kanha is also one of the best places in the world - if not the best place - to see wild tigers.

Kanha is situated in the Maikal hills, in the Satpura range of the central Indian highlands, in the State of Madhya Pradesh (22° 17'N, 80° 38'E). The land rises from 450 to 950 metres above sea level, and is drained by tributaries of the Narmada River. There are four main vegetation types - moist deciduous forest, dry deciduous forest, valley meadow, and dadar meadow. The moist deciduous forest, which covers 27% of the Park area, is dominated by sal trees. The forest is interspersed with grassy meadows, the result of early slash-and-burn cultivation by Baiga tribals.

Jamtara Safari

Activity overview

A local tracker and a professional guide from our lodge accompany you on your game drives interpreting the sights and sounds of the jungle. For an experienced and trained guide, the jungle is like an open book, and he can make the jungle come alive by reading tell-tale signs. Most animals, especially tigers, are creatures of habit. They have a regular patrolling pattern and they are partial to their favorite haunts. Our guides and trackers visit the park every day and keep a track of these movements by checking the spoor of the tigers and listening to the alarm calls of animals.

These alarm calls announce the presence of a tiger. A good guide who is familiar with the animals of his area can substantially increase your chances of seeing a tiger.

An Early wake up call, start your day with Hot coffee or Tea at the main dining area before you head out in open 4x4 jeeps to explore the jungle.
